2K's International PR Director changes team

remote control productions recruits industry veteran Markus Wilding

Munich, July 31st, 2015 – Communications expert Markus Wilding joins Hendrik Lesser's management team as Communications Director. Starting in September Wilding, a games industry veteran with about 20 years experience under his belt, will fill this new role at the Munich based production house. After tenures at Saitek and Activision he became Head of PR at Take 2 GSA until he advanced to the headquarters in early 2006 to become International PR Director for the new label 2K. After nearly a decade overseas (New York, San Francisco, London) Wilding returns to Germany. At rcp he will be responsible for PR and communications but also enhance the team in a leading role in business development, investor relations and internationalisation.

"I worked many years for AAA publishers and I feel that now is a great time to bring these experiences to a new and exciting environment." says Wilding.

"The team, the company's philosophy and their future plans quickly convinced me to take this step. Their success impressed me as well: The extremely successful Angry Birds Epic developed by the rcp family studio Chimera Entertainment together with Rovio and the very interesting cooperations of their label Gamify now! with well-known companies in the field of serious games speak for themselves. I am sure that we are only at the beginning of a great success story and I look forward to be part of it in a leading role."

“Markus is the best addition to the team that we could have hoped for.” comments Hendrik Lesser, Managing Director at remote control productions. “Not only are we looking forward to benefitting from his expertise and experience in communications, but above all he is valued as a person and a friend. Many of our team members have known him for years and we appreciate his talents and strengths. Therefore we are very eager to spread the spirit of the rcp family together with Markus.”
